

STREAMING 101: THE BASICS OF A QUALITY ONLINE PRESENCE

Churches with conservative budgets should still be able to host online services in order to reach those who are shut-in, traveling or home for other reasons. The push to get online has shown itself full of stumbling blocks and frustrations. From Facebook streaming on smartphones to full-production cameras, David Bullock has done hours of research working with all sizes of congregations to find options for cost-effective ways of running ministry online.

David is the executive pastor at Awake Church, Shelby. For over twenty years, he has been serving as a worship leader and production director for modest congregations of 100 to a large church with over 3,000 in attendance. He has a life-long focus on bringing excellence to the Sunday service so families can encounter God without distraction. One of his gifts is his ability to troubleshoot common tech problems to have online services with quality live streaming and sound.

Check out the live-stream he is responsible for at awakeshelby.com and bring your questions for a time of conversation and simple solutions for ways to get your congregation's worship services online.
